COLLABORATING TO CREATE SYSTEMS CHANGE

Many people within our communities have a lived experience of suicide, be that through having experienced suicidal thoughts; survived a suicide attempt; cared for someone through suicidal crisis; or being bereaved through suicide.

For those who have chosen to bring their current and past experiences to drive meaningful change and improve experiences for others, an opportunity now exists for your to participate in a half-day lived experience designed and delivered workshop, facilitated by Roses in the Ocean.

'Collaborating to Create Systems Change' is for people involved individually or as part of a Lived Experience Advisory/Reference/Working Group working to influence and inform system change. It provides key insights into how to effectively collaborate for positive outcomes in system reform, encouraging personal and group reflection to enhance learnings.

When considering this opportunity, please read 'Readiness to be involved in suicide prevention' to support you to make an informed decision.
